

TA PROOFREAD RCA: pt_BR

QUESTION 1: From the task, one input text contains « E como eu falei, eu te Rachel por todas as coisas extras. » This sentence is incomplete as a word is missing for context. Both responses add a word to make it have some sense. This affects groundedness, however, it's unclear what the expectation from the model in Proofreading is when there's a missing word like this? Repeating the sentence would still leave it incomplete and it's unclear how following instructions would be graded and how composition is affected, because a word is missing and not adding anything would render it bad. However, adding a word could be considered as something that affects following instructions.

- ANSWER: For the scope of this task, if a response adds a word so the sentence can make more sense, the response should be downgraded in Instruction Following (for unnecessary word change—unless we agree this is necessary word change. See the guidelines regarding unnecessary changes we have provided for ja_JP and zh_CN) and Groundedness.

If the response repeats the Input Text, this case would be rated as Fully Following and gets downgraded in Composition (maybe also Satisfaction?).

QUESTION 2: Interpretation of certain texts in pt-BR will vary between people. Example, “Tô viciado também no álbum novo daquele Anthony Chavez” is considered grammatically correct but a response changes the order to “no novo álbum”, which is also correct and slightly more common. Some people consider this a valid correction while others feel the original was already good and therefore the unnecessary change would be penalized.

Are words like elegantíssimo and rapidão, which are commonly used by Brazilians every day, but not necessarily the official declension, acceptable? Or would they need to be corrected as part of proofreading?

Similarly, sometimes the difference between input and response can be the word pra to para. The former is informal, the latter more formal. Is this sufficient to fail the composition (as a change of tone), while only partially failing instructions?

- ANSWER: Based on the specialized guidelines we released for ja_JP and zh_CN, which also apply to other locales, these word changes (awkward, formal >> common, informal usage; or the other way around) would be considered as unnecessary modifications, so Partially Following.
